A Florida man fined for driving at 39mph in a 30mph zone has decided to vent his frustration at a $215 speeding ticket by paying entirely in pennies. Brett Sanders called the charge “extortion” and said he wanted to make the government work for the money. “When my fine came due, I just decided I may as well pay with pennies and we’ll make a big spectacle of it. It felt great. It really felt great.” Rather than pay in a conventional manner, Sanders poured over 20,000 pennies into a pair of buckets and emptied them onto a clerk’s desk. He actually overpaid by $7.81, but he was happy to let them keep the change. „I’m just going to go ahead and let them keep that,” he said. Despite the fact Sanders claims he “didn’t endanger anybody’s life”, many people have been calling him out online for his brash actions and the fact that he was actually breaking the law.

Couple books dream holiday from the wrong Birmingham airport

A couple from the West Midlands have been left £1,200 out of pocket after they accidentally booked a dream holiday from the wrong Birmingham airport—and only realised when they showed up to fly. Janis Cove and Ben Marlow shelled out £1,200 for their trip to Las Vegas but mistakenly booked their flights from Birmingham in Alabama rather than the one here in the UK. Janis had booked the getaway on lastminute.com as a surprise birthday treat for her husband. “When we turned up at the airport we couldn’t find the flight details anywhere,” Ben said: “We approached one of the desks and they told us our holiday was booked from Alabama. „I was gutted—more for my partner than for me. She had told everyone and she was really upset. She was distraught and we didn’t know what to do. It’s embarrassing because everyone was really happy for us.” Their next destination is Barcelona, Spain and luckily there are no more cities with this name.
